PLUNGE into an out door pool is well enough in summer. But for any one to go out on a January morning, when the ground is covered with snow and to dive into a tank of icy water, clad in a bathing suit of the Annette Kellerman type, is a different and seartling matter. It makes one shiver to think of it.

Polar bears don't mind it, though, nor do the Washington "Polar Bears." Already there are over a hundred people who have become "bears," with a firm resolution to swim outdoors every morning during the winter. "It's the best thing in the world to arouse the appetite," said one of them, and if any one wants an appetizer and cares to get one by indulging in this sport, he may do so by giving his name to F. J. Brunner of the Washington Swimming Club.

The exhibit now to be seen in the division of mineral technology, in the older building of the United States National Museum, centers around a model which shows the occurrence of sulphur in this region and the procedure for its extraction. Superheated water is forced down pipes to the level of the sulphur, which is brought to the surface by an air lift as fast as it melts and flows practically nure into bins ready for shipment. The capacity of such a well for a period is probably from 400 to 600 tons per day.

Sulphur is found in animal and vegetable life, but most conspicuously in

For this reason deposits of sulphur were long supposed to be indicative of volcanic action, but it is now known that such occurrences at those of our gulf region, where it exists in pockets in strictly sedimentary rock, represent a derivation deposit identical with those which yield our plaster of Paris or wall plaster, itself a compound of calcium with sulphur and oxygen.

In addition to annexing two south At-lantic championships, it made a clean sweep in the municipal meet last spring. Its members are all amateurs. They are so much interested in the sport that they are now planning, in addition to the outdoor work, women's and men's clubs for every section of the city for work in the inclosed pools this winter.

The object is to teach swimming to as many as possible and to make them proficient in life saving for the formation of life-saving corps for the protection of bathers and canoists. To stimu late interest, water basket ball, polo and base ball games are being arranged with out-of-town teams. It is expected that the pool at the New Central High the club will not be competitors or life savers, but will swim for pleasure only.

of swimmers in the river and independent bath houses, and the total number of swimmers each day in Washington will equal 5,000, for a grand total over a period of ninety days of summer weather of 450,000.

While incidentally annexing a few points for his club in the national championship and closed meets in various places, Reginald Rutherford, president of the Washington Swimming Club, has been inspecting conditions in other cities this summer. He states that although Washington is by no means last, it is far from first in providing facilities for swimmers. He is suggesting to his fellow clubmen the erection of a great natatorium similar to the one in Pittsburgh, where people may splash in the water at any period of the day or night and at any time of the year.
